INTRODUCTION.

The fourth and last paper of the Provincial period of South Carolina [1] was The South-Carolina Gazette; And Country Journal, the first issue of which appeared December 17, 1765. This first issue was entitled The South-Carolina Gazetteer, And Country Journal, but after the second issue, "Gazetteer" was changed to "Gazette" and the comma following changed to a semi-colon. At this time the Stamp Act agitation was at its height, and at the top of the first page of the first six issues was printed in conspicuous letters: "No Stamped Paper to be had." The proprietor of the new venture was Charles Crouch, a young man, who had received his training under Peter Timothy, of The South-Carolina Gazette[2]. For ten years he successfully conducted the Country Journal in Charles Town, although during that whole period there were two flourishing contemporaries in the town.

In his paper of August 1, 1775, Crouch gave notice of the temporary suspension of his paper during his absence, announcing that he would complete his advertising obligations by issuing several supplements after the last regular issue of August 1st. On the 24th of August he embarked for Philadelphia and the vessel whereon he set sail was lost at sea and all on board perished.

[2] Crouch had formerly been an apprentice to Peter Timothy. In The South-Carolina Gazette of February 19, 1753, Timothy advertised for his apprentice, Charles Crouch, who had run away, and gave his age as "about 18".

The following numbers are missing from the Charleston Library Society's files:

No. 52., Tuesday, December 9, 1766.

The supplements (?) issued after August 1, 1775.

In 1778, Mrs. Ann Crouch, widow of Charles, revived her deceased husband's paper, under the title of The Charles- town Gazette, and for nearly two years successfully conducted the venture, but the siege of the town in 1780 put an end to that gazette's career.

Only a few copies of The Charlestown Gazette are known to be in existence, and they are in the Charleston Library Society's collection, and are as follows:
